CHAPTER II

ELEMENT OF TRADING

FOREX BROKER

Brokers offer important services for the market, especially for retail Forex traders.

Since they started operations in the retail market, brokers have helped open up many opportunites that previously did not exist for individual traders.

Brokers also offer valuable services to help traders understand price movements that have the potential to generate profits.

With an internet connectioon and a computer or mobile phone, traders can now open a Forex account and trade in a market that was previously only accessible to banks, large corpora€ons and financial instutions, as well as very wealthy individuals.

TYPE OF BROKER

Market Maker (Dealing Desk)

The currency price in the broker is man -made. That is, the price you see in the chart comes from an internal broker and not from an interbank or liquidity provider (LP).

Due to fierce competiton from brokers to attract customers, the price they offer is almost the same as the interbank. Market makers make a profit from spreads and hedging with their customers.

There are 2 types of No Dealing Desk (NDD):

1. Straight Through Processing (STP)
Most STP brokers offer variable spreads. If the spread between liquidity providers increases, the spread that reaches the trader also increases. There are also brokers offering fixed spreads.

2. Electronic Communication Network (ECN)
ECN brokers charge a commission and there is a markup on the spread. Pricing comes from LPs and other ECN traders.

If you are really new to the field of Forex, I recommend to start trading with virtual money (there is a risk involved) in an account commonly known as a Forex demo account.

Once you've gained experience in demo accounts, you may continue to open a micro Forex account (suitable for beginners, low deposit) or a penny (cent) Forex account (account balance in cents, trade in cents) to start trading in the real market with a small deposit.
